This sword was the main center of the event the hot prince and the dragon: according to the Albedo dialogue in Festering Desire, sword was created by a smith that disappeared shortly after, and his creation got lost in time, eventually ending up in the Treasure Hoarders' possessions. When stolen goods were reclaimed from a group of Treasure Hoarders by the Knights of Favonius, this sword was rediscovered. As no one came to claim it, he investigated the sword and discovered its true origins: this sword's blade has been coated with a powder made of Durin's remains, notably his eyes, claws, and scales. This has caused to infuse the weapon with Durin's remains, notably his eyes, claws, and scales. corruption might seep through the handle and infect the body of the wielder; Albedo goes as far as considering the sword as "a living being" and theorizing that this curse might be the reason behind its creator's mysterious fate. The Traveler is unaffected by the curse as they have the ability to purify corrupted items, as demonstrated when they purified Dvalin's tears, hence why Albedo entrusts the sword to them for experimentation. The sword eventually is cleaned of its corruption by the end of Raiders Amidst Snow Mist thanks to the Traveler purifying it over time, although some of its sheer power is lost when it is transferred by accident into the Resurgent Cryo Registrine during Uninvited Guests, Albedo extracts the rest into a bottle during Afterword, gifting the now safe sword to the Traveler as a memento of their research. During this event, the sword could grant various unlockable boosts when used in Dragonspine and also received a AA1.5 Refinement EXP boost.
